No wonder he wants others to know about it. That shows him to be. what he is, a right-thinking and a right feeling. man. His announcement will do good-lots by good as there is a multitude of men and women tormented in the same way Mr. Hodgeon was. Some have symptoms like his, and others have different ones, but they all signify the presence and power of the same old nuisance and scourge-indigestion and dyspensis. The reader takes notice, of course, of the form in which the foregoing statement is made—the form of a simple and scienza declaration, according to law, before a magistrate, the Mayor of Leeds. The only purpose of this on the part of Mr. Hodgson is to impart all the dignity and who disputes it would dispute the uncontradicted testimony of a witness in a court of justice. But no fear. CHAPTER X. A NINE DAYS' WONDER.

Au inquest is at the best of times a depressing performance, but it is es ecially so under the conditions which attended that upon the body of noor Seth Chickering. Here was a man-a stranger-anddenly struck down in the very heart of London, on the very night of his arrival by an assassin's hand—and struck down, too, in no obscure corner, no hidrous backwater of human life in the purliens of the East End, but in the very centre of London's fashionable existence, in the neighbourhood of one of London's most famous streets. There was something so terr ble, mysterious, so malignant about the deed that it passed at once from the category of ordinary orimes Only one person came forward after the event was made public who was able to give any fresh information to the jury. This was a man who gave his name as James Bostock, whose business in life was that of a teacher of fencing, and who was employed in that capacity at the Culture College, Chelsen. He had not, however. very much information to give. All that he had to say was that on the evening of the crime he was coming from St. James's Park in the direction of Piccadilly. Just as he was crossing the carriage-road between the park and the Palaon a man ran against him-a man who was going at full speed, and who seemed to be under the influence of great excitement. Mr. Blostock said that he was able to see the man's face very plinly, and he described it in terms which o rresponded vary closely with the description given by Gundy. The man who ran against Mr. Bostock had, like the man who ran agninet Mr. Gundy, a mass of red bair, and the lower part of his face was almost concealed by a large red beard. One other particular Mr. Bostock was able, however, to add. He declared that when the man came to a momentary halt, after running up against bim, he broke out into some angry utterance, the meaning of which Mr. Bostock did not understand, as it was in a language unfamilier to him. Being further questioned he said he was perfectly sure that it was neither French, German, Italian, nor Spanish, as he himself was fairly well acquainted with all those languages, and that what the man said was sufficiently long to have allowed him time to follow it if it had been in any tongue of which he knew anything. One of the jury, whose mind seemed to be running on Nibilism, suggested that perhaps it might have been Russian. Mr. Bostock agreed that perhaps it might have been Rossian. The coroner observed that there were many outlandish tongues talked in Europe as well as Russian. There was Tarkish, for example, and Greek. Mr. Gundy thereupon pleasantly suggested that there was Magyar, Roumanian, Bulgarian, Polish, and the
